Location Annapolis,
Maryland

excerpt;

James Chao, father of Mitch McConnell's wife Elaine, has a lot of questions to answer after 40 kilograms of cocaine (about $6.7 million worth) was found on the Ping May, a ship owned by the Foremost Amsterdam. It is known that the Ping May has been witnessed at the port of Zaanstad, one of these cities, in the past.

Foremost Group is the source of most of Senator McConnell's fortune through gifts and inheritance from his in-laws.

In my opinion the thread title is misleading. It makes it sound as if his father-in-law was directly responsible. This could have been done by anyone from a deckhand on up. The link did not work but I will try it again.

As an edit I would like to add I would say the same thing if it was a ship (not boat which makes it sound personal) from Harry Reid's Father-in-law's shipping company if he had one. If the father-in-law was responsible or had knowledge try him accordingly but I doubt this had anything to do with Mitch McConnell.

Of course this has nothing to do with Mitch McConnell.

Yet another sign of the crippling desperation currently gripping the liberals. It's quite funny really.

The war on drugs is a failure..the for profit prison industrial complex and all the poor people stuck behind bars is the real story.
